Exam Preparation and Description

No special preparation required. To ensure privacy and comfort, patients are paired with a technologist of the same sex and scanned in an area away from other patients and staff. Before the exam, the patient is positioned on the MRI table and the technologist will carefully insert a small lubricated rubber catheter into the rectum, which is used to fill the rectum with clear, room temperature gel. The catheter is removed and the patient is positioned on their back, feet first for scanning. During the scan, the technologist will instruct the patient to push out the gel. Several pushes may be necessary. The gel is voided onto a disposable, sanitary sheet, which is easily bundled and discarded. The patient is then escorted to a private restroom. The total exam will take about 45 minutes (actual scan time is usually less than 30 minutes). The exam is painless and simple; therefore, normal activities may be resumed immediately following the exam. The results are sent to the referring physician within 48 hours.
